ABSTRACT

The present invention relates generally to implants and processes for preparing implants such as dental prostheses. More particularly, the present invention concerns an implant having an expandable skirt and a widened upper hood for anchoring the implant within the bone of the patient.